Step Inside Casey Neistat and Candice Pool's Dream L.A. Hideaway

The creative pair hired Daun Curry to design a home that represents their laid-back Venice lifestyle

In the entryway, Cole & Sons Fleet Lanyes Pleater wallpaper mingles with Benjamin Moore Frosted Rose paint. Some of couple Casey Neistat and Candice Pool's favorite sentimental items reside under the stairs, like trinkets from South Africa (where Pool was born), and tiki art. "Casey thinks it looks like a thrift store, but I like having a place to see some of my favorite things," Pool says.

When YouTube impresario Casey Neistat and jewelry designer Candice Pool first started mapping out their new L.A. home, they had one very specific request: no dining room. Why forgo a formal eating space? "Well, dining rooms are stupid," Neistat says. "Any room that is designed to only be used for specific occasions just doesn't make sense when you have kids." It's exactly this practical and laid-back attitude that makes their four-bedroom home in Venice, which they finished earlier this year, so inviting—the cool mix of reupholstered Eames and CB2 is, much like the couple, both aspirational and approachable.

That's not to say they designed the house alone. Pool, the designer behind cool-girl fine jewelry brand Finn and lifestyle brand Love Billy, first hired interior designer Daun Curry to help with her New York showrooms, and soon after that, a friendship was born. Curry took on their New York apartment, too, so when the couple purchased the L.A. home in 2018 and prepped for a cross-country move from NYC, they naturally called upon their friend once again.

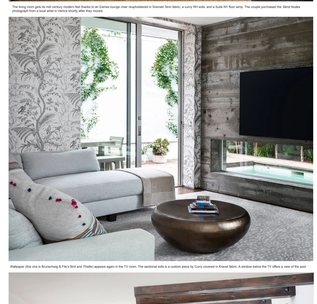

The indoor/outdoor home opens to a pool area, where teak CB2 outdoor furniture adds a touch of coziness.

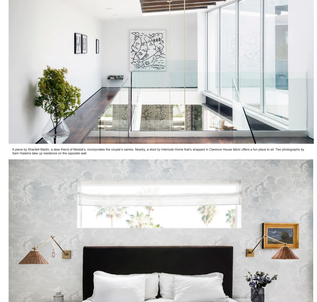

The only problem? The trio were New York–based at that point. "We did so much planning for this place from 3,000 miles away, and looking at a floor plan only communicates so much," Neistat says. So the filmmaker, whose YouTube following is 12.2 million strong, did what he does best: shot, edited, and narrated videos of the house so that Pool and Curry could use them to discuss layouts and furniture. "For Daun and me, they were invaluable," Pool says, though Neistat admits that watching the videos on repeat helped him in a way, too. "It was therapy for the frustration of wanting to be there but still finalizing our move," he says.

But by the time the project wrapped up in February, Curry had transformed the modern glass-and-concrete house into a warm family home—one that's not afraid of personality, from the bubblegum-pink entryway paint to the blue-and-white reupholstered Eames chair in the living room. "Monochrome can be boring, and we don't really own enough art, so wallpaper goes a long way," Neistat says. In fact, patterned paper appears in several rooms of the house.

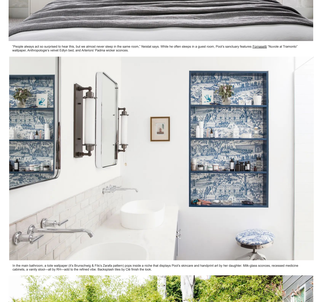

Still, nothing in the home is an untouchable showpiece, and every space serves a purpose, even if it's just to relax. Need proof? "The room [that was] meant to be a dining room is now a playroom," says Neistat. "And it gets used all the time."

YouTube impresario Casey Neistat, jewelry designer Candice Pool, and their family spend the most time in the kitchen of their home in L.A.'s Venice area, which was designed by Daun Curry. On the hub of the house," says Pool. Tile tiles line the backsplash, and RH pendants and barstools. The chairs are family heirlooms from South Africa.

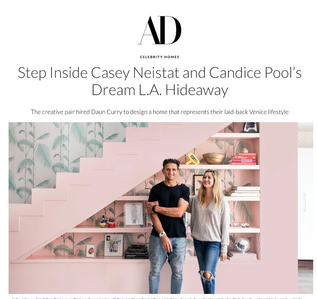

The living room gets its mid-century modern feel thanks to an Eames lounge chair reupholstered in Svanreit Tonn fabric, a corny RH sofa, and a Sculp RH floor lamp. The couple purchased the Send Nudes photograph from a local artist in Venice shortly after they moved.

Wallpaper (this one is Brunschwig & Fils's Bird and Thistle) appears again in the TV room. The sectional sofa is a custom piece by Curry covered in Kvadrat fabric. A window below the TV offers a view of the pool.

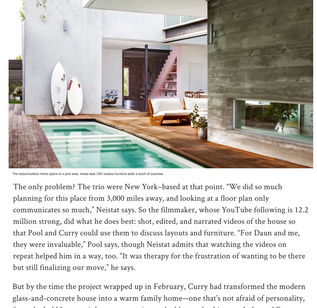

A piece by Standard Books, a local friend of Neistat's, incorporates the couple's names. Nearby, a stool by Interlude Home that's wrapped in Clarence House fabric offers a flat place to sit. Two photographs by Sam Hoskins take up residence on the opposite wall.

"People always act so surprised to hear this, but we almost never sleep in the same room," Neistat says. While he often sleeps in a guest room, Pool's sanctuary features Cornelia "Bonnie at Tramonto" wallpaper, Anthropologie's velvet Eden bed, and Adrenoir Padma wicker sconces.

In the main bathroom, a tole wallpaper (it's Brunschwig & Fils's Zandra pattern) pops inside a niche that displays Pool's skincare and hairspirit set by her daughter. Mile glass sconces, recessed medicine cabinets, a vanity mirror—all by Kohler—add to the retro vibe. Also featured: Glen by Cal Bear tile in the tub.

The couple outfitted the tiny yard with artificial grass so the kids could play there—then Casey filled it with his surfboards and bikes. "I suppose I should be thankful that my husband has embraced his SoCal/Venice by making sure kids play area his play area, too," Pool says. The bench is from Anthropologie.
